Newcomers

What sets newcomers apart from beginners is not having any basic program skills. The newcomer is not acquainted with the standard features of the application, for example, the significant program functions or the desktop. Therefore, a user without prior knowledge is recommended to participate in the newcomer course instead of choosing the beginner's course. In this way, he gets a good start into the application and makes himself familiar with the programs without having to share the class with practiced, mostly impatient participants.

For whom is this course useful?

Users without any basic program skills

Your benefit

During your training you are not exposed to the impatience of qualified beginners, but you have enough time to patiently get acquainted with the program's functions.
